

Egypt. On d'Archéologie Egyptiennes (Paris, 1893-1912), vi. 167-173; J. H. Breasted, History of the Ancient Egyptians (London, 1908), pp. 50 sq.; 148; symbolize his sovereignty over both the South and the North. E. A. Wallis Budge, Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, ii. S-io, 13, the distinctive colour of Upper, as red was of Lower, Egypt. The tomb, with its interesting contents, was discovered and excavated by Monsieur E. Amelineau. The masses, almost the mountains, Egypt was called "the Red House." of broken pottery, under which the tomb was found to be buried, are probably remains of the vessels in which pious pilgrims presented their offerings at the shrine. See E. Amelineau, op. cit. pp. 85 sq.; J. H.